

Colour Snap

Rhys Coren, Jacob Dahlgren, Anna Mac, Anna Ray and Liz West

3 January – 7 February 2019

UHArts is delighted to present Colour Snap, an exhibition exploring the endless ways in which colour shapes our world. Encompassing installation, moving image, painting and textile work by artists Rhys Coren, Jacob Dahlgren, Anna Mac, Anna Ray and Liz West, the exhibition encourages physical, emotional and personal responses to colour.

Colour has a profound effect on us even though we may not be aware of it. Colour represents, more than any other attribute of our visual experience, a place where both physical properties and personal experiences are interwoven in an intimate way. This group exhibition brings together five national and international artists to investigate their playful approaches to colour.

Rhys Coren works across animation, writing, performance and painting. He explores rhythm, colour and texture in work that is characterised by cartoon-like clouds, grids of colour, shadows and the interplay of lines. His multidisciplinary practice is inspired by 80's electronic dance music and Josef Albers' colour theory, overlaying his works with a cheeky sense of humour. Colour Snap presents two of Coren's animations – Snap! (2016) and Love Motion (2018). Changing colour with every move, the snapping fingers of Snap! create an immersive experience within the projection space whilst the screen-based Love Motion with its original soundtrack is inspired by the flowing lyrical movements of Matisse's dancing figures.

Jacob Dahlgren makes use of pre-existing mass-produced objects to realise his works. Arranging these familiar objects in large numbers, his installations come together as abstract paintings within an expanded field. The Wonderful World of Abstraction (2006) takes its sculptural form from thousands of metres of multi-coloured ribbon, which are suspended uniformly from a metal frame – to a kaleidoscopic effect. Visitors are invited to step into this pictorial and sculptural space, allowing for a playful, interactive experience of colour. Dahlgren delights in moments of physical and social interaction, and acknowledges the sensual pleasure of the material world.

Anna Mac's use of colour and delicate clean shapes come to life in her artworks. She describes the way she paints as a game of building and taking away – where the smallest edition of a shape or use of colour can transform the painting. Whichever way it plays out, the end result should represent a strong sense of balance, colour and composition. Colour Snap showcases four paintings from her Colour Palette Series (2018) which Mac has created specifically for the exhibition and which have been acquired for the permanent UH Art Collection. The combination of these vivid, intense colours surprisingly conveys a sense of calm.

Anna Ray's use of textiles pushes the parameters between what would be considered craft and art. An understanding of traditional techniques such as embroidery and tapestry, enables Ray to play with materials and colour to create new abstract works. Tassel (2018) which will be exhibited for the first time in Colour Snap is a site-specific textile installation of wool tassels gently swaying on their wire supports. This sensual work, rich in colour, lies on the territory between drawing and three-dimensional sculpture. As part of the exhibition, Anna Ray will run a creative session with participants experimenting with pattern and repetition across different fibre-based media. The finished installation will be presented alongside the exhibition.

With her sculptural work and site-specific installations, Liz West creates vivid environments that mix luminous colour and radiant light – aiming to provoke a heightened sensory awareness in the viewer. Using multi-coloured filters, refraction and reflection, Autumn Lights (2016) investigates the relationship between colour and light through an engagement between materials used within a given site. West drew inspiration from over thirty thousand lead window panes of Little Moreton Hall in Cheshire, for which Autumn Lights was commissioned by National Trust. Now re-locating to the Art & Design Gallery in Hatfield, the installation will respond to a dramatically different architectural space. This interplay of architecture, light and colour will constantly change as the sun's natural light shifts through the day.

Colour Snap takes a deeper look at how colour – as a physical phenomenon – can behave and be perceived in complex ways. “We all have deeply rooted relationships with colour,” says exhibition curator Inna Allen. “This group show of surprising artworks invites us to experience it in fresh ways.”
